

ABSTRACT

The present invention relates to an apparatus for dividing a bank in a flash memory. A block of the flash memory is divided into two banks and each page buffer is located between the two banks to share an input/output line.

- 5 Therefore, it is possible to shorten the length of a bit line, improve a data sensing rate, and allow one bank to perform one operation while the other bank performs a read, write or erase operation.